WEDNESDAY EVENING, JULY 16, 1879.

THE COMET OF 1879 .- Mr. S. C. Chandler sends the Science Observer the following information in regard to the comet that was discovered by Lewis Swift on the 19th of June last: "The comet was observed by me on four evenings. On two of these good determinations of position were obtained with a ring micrometer on a three inch Clark refrector. Oa the other evenings the best I could do was to make careful allineations of the comet with the telescopic stars in the field, and a careful re-duction of these has furnished positions which ere probably less than a minute of are in error." Mr. Chandler has also calculated the orbit and finds that it does not resemble that of any known comet. The movements of the meteor will be as follows: Between the 13:h and 14:h of July, the comet will pass nearly over the celestial pole, which is the cause of the abrupt change of about twelve hours in right ascension, in the ephemeris. Although the comet will slowly approach the earth until the 17th of July, it will become no brighter, since it is receding from the sun more rapidly. Although casily seen with three inches aparture, the comet is difficut to observe with the micrometer on a telescope of that size. It has an oval disc about five minutes of are in diameter and its light is considerably condensed toward the centre.

A BANKAM'S FIGHT WITH A FOX -Mr. W. P. Levis of Dayton, Ohio., has a miniature zpological garden at his mills on East Water street, and among the collection is a diminutive bantam rooster that has exhibited a spirit of heroic bravery as great as did the Cincionati donkey in whipping a lioness. A few day since a tame crow, while taking a meditative walk, came in to close proximity to a sly old fex that was feigning sleep near his den, where he is confined by a light chain. Before the cow was aware of the danger, the fex had seized it.

Then there was a loud "caw, caw," and a flapping of wings which attracted the attention of the little bantam rooster. He took in the situation at a glance, and sushed to the rescue of his feathered companion. The placky little rooster flew into the face of the fox, struck bard with wing and spur, and so worried the fox that he dropped the crowand gave bisattention to the rocster, but his feathered antagonist proved as agile as he is trave, and so soon as he saw the poor crow hop of safely beyond the limits of Reynards chain, he concluded the law of self preservation was the next best thing in order. The fox sku'ked into his den so deeply chagrined at the turn of affairs he did not come out again that day. The above is not a fable.
